

Welcombe House.

Postmarked:

August 5, 1920

My dearest Aunt.

I'm sorry I sent

Such a depressed mail yesterday.
It was so wet, so cold, & the food supply so ill-organized that our wast fabrics were roused.

Yesterday afternoon the wast was over. It cleared up - vast supplies of over-due food found in the cook cooked seals appeared off the wall rock, we took long walks & found the public house at Nagenslonne -

The question of Tony is settled by the food difficulties - The countryside has more people to feed than it can support - every farm-house is full to bursting - every egg is commandeered days before it is laid.

However, thanks to John & Oliver we have wangled our share - but I don't think we could feed anyone else.

Cecil's appearance was another shock.
He's gone thin & white, & for half-an-hour he'll rag, & then curl up & never speak. The truth about Johannes is more complicated than we supposed. The Notts had a lot to do with it - but the rest ~~is~~ seems to have been a more subjective trouble I can tell you all about it when we meet.

We have got over the place's desolation it was a shock after the rich loveliness of the Pyrenees, rocks & beauty & an awful sea. Now we're ~~any longer~~ happy & shaken in — the house is delightful — I never felt better in my life.

Cecil asks to be remembered to you, John's love & mine — can't write any more — they all arguing about literature & I can't let some of their stale waxes pass!

Gay - Darbys is very good — you don't appreciate your blessings in knowing the author.

Ever your loving

Gay.
